Things to do in Rincon

Swimming

Swimming in Rincón is a year round thing. The average water temperature is only 74-80 degrees, which is quite comfortable. From November thru March, the northern shores of Rincón is home to frequent wave action. The best place to swim is usually the coastline area at the Public Beach headed south. From April thru August, the lack of surf action makes the waters that surround Rincon smooth as glass, including the usual surf spots! A very popular year round swimming beach is Playa Corcega.

Scuba Diving

Scuba diving in western Puerto Rico is known to be the best of the island because of its underwater geological diversity.

Rincon has two excellent dive operators that can take you out to various dive spots including the islands of Desecheo and Mona. Both Desecheo and Mona Island's pristine diving conditions provide over 100ft+ visibility at any given time of the year. The two islands are also designated as Natural Reserve Parks which protect both it's own land as well as marine resources. Diving is also excellent along the shoreline of Rincón. If the surf doesn't allow for diving in one area you can always go south to La Parguera, you're sure to get some diving done!

Surfing

Rincon has long been known for some of the best surfing in the Caribbean. The regular surf season usually lasts from November thru March. This "winter" surf season is dependent on the low-pressure systems and cold fronts that come off the U.S. East Coast. There are the occasional surf swells during the late summer months of August thru October; these isolated swells come from the tropical weather patterns generated off the coast of Africa, during the peak of hurricane season. If you are interested in learning how to surf, there are lessons available with experienced surfers who also supply the boards. Surfboards and body boards can be rented from the local surf shops in town.

Whale Watching

During the winter months, usually from December through March. These whales migrate south over 3,100 miles every year from the coasts of southwestern Greenland, Newfoundland, and surrounding areas to the warm waters of the Caribbean.
